The State Elections.

The results of the late elections show very clearly that the contest has been almost precisely as it was two years ago, between the Democratic and the Union parties.

The reason of this is in the fact that it has been thrown in favor of the Democratic party, as organized and directed during the war.

The Philadelphia Convention gave the country a basis of restoration upon the principles settled by the war—and this the South gave its unanimous, sincere, and cordial assent to.

Unfortunately the friends of the Administration lent themselves to the project. Democratic committees and Democratic candidates required to withdraw and demanded of the Administration the aid of its patronage.

The natural effect of all this was to produce upon the public mind the conviction that the aim of the Administration was to restore the Democratic party to power; and as this conviction grew the political power of the Administration dwindled until it absolutely ceased.

The elections that have just taken place have made the issue with regard to Southern restoration a simple one. The conditions laid down by Congress have been approved by the popular voice.

The action of Congress next session in the matter of restoring the Southern States will be undoubtedly in accordance with this verdict.

We need a speedy settlement of the political difficulty, not only because there is danger in keeping it open until it becomes chronic, but because there are other important questions demanding attention.

for us, and it calls for some action to place our credit on a proper footing. The creditors of an individual is measured by his ability to pay.

This is our present condition; but when we look at the national debt, we find that the vast continent, at the surprising productive power of thirty-five millions of active and enlightened freemen, and at the increase of population, which doubles in twenty-five years.

We call upon the Administration and Congress, then, to head up our political troubles at once, and turn their attention to this most important matter.

The proper comparison with the vote of last Tuesday is that of 1864, when the full vote was out. Lincoln's majority was nearly 60,000.

his popularity and influence in the district where he resides. He will invest his property in the case, with the best chance of rendering another gain to the radical delegation in Congress.
